

IMPRESS ME AND YOU'RE HIRED!

NEW

Job interviews are nerve-racking, but are they the best way for a boss to find out what a prospective employee has to offer? This week, Five is trying a different approach in a new reality show that crosses The Apprentice and Come Dine with Me, but it's twice as stressful!

The Boss is Coming to Dinner sees candidates competing to land their dream job, not with a formal interview but by entertaining the boss in their own homes. They'll have to cook all the food and host the perfect evening – all while having questions fired at them.

Shown on five nights each week, the first four episodes have two job-hunters going head-to-head. Each night, one will go through to Friday's final, where

The Apprentice meets Come Dine With Me as people compete for their dream job...

THE BOSS IS COMING TO DINNER

Weekdays, 6.00pm Five Factual

the last four hopefuls face a mystery task at the boss' home.

Kicking off the series is beauty salon owner Julie Williams, whose Brighton salon boasts a celebrity clientele that includes Katie Price and Heather Mills. She's seeking a beauty therapist who can handle starry egos and client confidentiality. It's a plum job, but Julie's a tough employer...

'I don't tolerate sickness,' she says. 'I expect my girls to come in to work even if they're half-dead.'

Will any of the eight candidates meet her exacting standards? ■

Grilling... Julie quizzes candidates over dinner

Vacancy... Julie's salon in Brighton